Your Comments: It's ridiculous that after all this time and all these facts, the rich polluters can get away without being forced to completely clean up the entire Willamette River so that all fish in all parts of it are perfectly good to catch and eat!! My voice and the voices of Other Oregonians don't even seem to matter, the special interests just keep on winning these battles. When will organized oversight committees ever take a stand and tell these rich polluters "NO MORE"? Ever? This looks like another time the group who can make change happen will back down with their tails between their legs and whimper, "we can't stand up and tell the big companies to clean up the river and do a complete job because we're scared". The EPA decision makers should be more concerned that Oregonians will forever remember their frightening inability to do the right thing. These huge companies have made far more income over the years than it will cost them to clean up the entire Willamette completely, so cost is immaterial, and a lousy excuse for the EPA not finalizing a thorough Superfund Cleanup of the entire Willamette site. The only "fair" decision weighs 100% in favor of nature, 0% for commerce.
